1 Background

Prof. Tu Weiming previously proposed that the notion of the Confucian entrepreneur could be developed as a new promising domain of discourse. With that in mind, the Institute for Advanced Humanistic Studies and the World Ethics Institute Beijing sought to shape this public sphere by promoting dialogue between Confucian scholars and entrepreneurs, and to create a new identity for entrepreneurs in a world shifting from an axial age to a dialogical age.

“Discourse on Confucian Entrepreneurs 2014,” the second annual conference held by the two institutions, discussed “Role Models and Wealth.” The first one held in October 2013, focused on the theme of “Confucian Entrepreneurs as Public Intellectuals with Spiritual Humanism.”

2 Vision of the Conference

The inspiration for initiating a discussion on “Role Models and Wealth” comes from the following two concrete events:

• 2014 was the 100th anniversary of a visit to China by the Japanese Confucian entrepreneur Shibusawa Eiichi (1840–1931). We were honored to have Mr. Shibusawa Masahide (b. 1925), Eiichi’s great-grandson, visit the Institute for Advanced Humanistic Studies to commemorate this event. We took this opportunity to host a day of talks on “East Asian Confucian Entrepreneurs as Role Models,” such as Zhang Jian (1853–1926), Shibusawa Eiichi, etc., and a day of discussion on “Wealth and Life.” We expected to derive rich resources for cultivating model business leaders in East Asia and to enrich the meaning and significance of Confucian entrepreneurship in the context of globalization.

- In 2012 the German entrepreneur Mr. Karl Schlecht used his “birthday present” from Sany Group as seed money for establishing the World Ethics Institute Beijing at Peking University to develop a notion of world ethics that seeks to transform private wealth into public wealth for the purpose of bringing people together. It is this notion that we seek to discuss and highlight as a source of value.

This conference was a part of the series designed to initiate a public discourse on the key concept of Confucian entrepreneurs, which has been reemerging nowadays in east Asian societies, especially in business communities.

3 Agenda

Part 1: Talks, May 12
“East Asian Confucian Entrepreneurs as Role Models”

The notion of Confucian entrepreneurs not only emerged from the traditions of East Asian businessmen; it also encompasses local knowledge with modern and global significance. Relying on scholarly analysis of historical paragons of the Confucian entrepreneur, along with contemporary entrepreneurs who embody Confucian qualities, we hope help shift society towards the Confucian entrepreneurial approach. With this model we can address issues that all people face in an age of globalization, by enriching our spiritual, moral, ethical, and organizational resources. This discussion of the Confucian entrepreneur emphasized cross-cultural and interdisciplinary investigations that combine the resources of East and West, ancient times and modernity, to collectively discuss individuals of the business world who exemplify the spirit of humanism.

Keynote talks

- Tu Weiming, “On Confucian Entrepreneur”
  Director of the World Ethics Institute Beijing, Peking University
  Director of the Institute for Advanced Humanistic Studies, Peking University
  Professor of Economics, Guanghua School of Management, Peking University
- Shibusawa Masahide, “On Shibusawa Eiichi”
Part 2: Discussion, May 13

“Wealth and Life”

Confucianism possesses a broad understanding of wealth (“What gathers humans together? Wealth”—Book of Changes). This understanding can shatter the narrow-minded focus on individual, material wealth. Confucianism also presents a unique approach to dealing with wealth (“The benevolent cultivate selves through wealth”—Great Learning). Here wealth is fused with the concept of self-cultivation, as a major asset that enables us to realize ourselves by embodying family harmony, beneficent governance of state, and peace under Heaven. These two basic perspectives are key to molding the characters of the East Asian entrepreneurs. In recent years, people have upheld a wide variety of philosophies of wealth. These generally emerge from the influence of economic views of the European Enlightenment and the popularity of pluralistic cultures. This dialogue on the Confucian entrepreneur seeks to engage with the notion of wealth from such perspectives as religion, economics, business management, and philanthropy in the hope of presenting a comprehensive view.
